Certification & Signatures

I, the depositor, accept full responsibility for the investment performance and the tax consequences relating to this contribution, and certify that the contribution complies with the contribution and rollover limitations of Internal Revenue Code sections 408A as explained in the Disclosure Statement of the Roth IRA plan agreement. I assume full responsibility for determining the amount of the Roth contribution which I am entitled to make. I expressly understand that my rollover or recharacterization contribution, if any, is irrevocable. I also certify that my conversion or rollover contribution, if any, does not include to any extent, a required minimum distribution amount which is required to be distributed from a traditional IRA or employer plan.

Contribution Limit for Your Regular or Spousal Contribution

Tax Year	If Not Age 50	If Age 50 or Older
2005	$4,000	$4,500
2006-2007	$4,000	$5,000
2008-2012	$5,000	$6,000
2013-2016	$5,500*	$6,500*

*These limits may be adjusted for cost of living changes after 2015.

The contributions which you make to your traditional IRAs and Roth IRAs must be combined for purposes of the contribution limit. Contributions are first considered made to the traditional IRA and then to the Roth IRA, regardless of when the actual contributions are made. Thus, if you contribute more than the limit to such accounts, the excess will arise in the Roth IRA. Note: All contributions must be in cash. However, rollover, transfer and recharacterization contributions need not be in cash as long as the IRA custodian/trustee agrees to accept such contributions. Special rules apply and would need to be met.

Note: Any regular or spousal contribution must be in cash or check.
